In the media

Dear Readers,

October has been a month of significant progress and collaboration for the Inclusive Society Institute. Our partnership with Stellenbosch University's School for Public Leadership at the 18th International Winelands Conference was a highlight, bringing together thought leaders and practitioners to explore innovative approaches to governance and inclusive development. These discussions reinforced the importance of collective action in addressing the complex challenges facing South Africa and the global community.

Our recent publications have tackled pressing issues such as reforming multilateral institutions, Africa's evolving security landscape and the fiscal implications of longevity. These insights are designed to inform policy and stimulate dialogue among stakeholders committed to building resilient and equitable societies. We believe that evidence-based research and open consultation are essential tools for shaping a future where fairness and transparency prevail.

Beyond research and advocacy, we remain deeply engaged in promoting social cohesion. Rising distrust and anti-immigration sentiment, as highlighted in our GovDem survey, remind us of the urgency to foster understanding and solidarity across communities. Through partnerships, education, and policy innovation, we aim to counter these trends and strengthen the fabric of our democracy.

As we look ahead to November, our focus will shift to deepening international cooperation and advancing reforms that enhance global governance. We invite you to stay connected, share your perspectives, and join us in driving meaningful change.

Thank you for your continued support. Together, we can build an inclusive society that reflects the values of justice, equality and shared prosperity.

Warm regards,

Daryl Swanepoel
