Dear Readers,

September has been a month of reflection and purposeful action for the Inclusive Society Institute. Our commitment to building a just, cohesive, and forward-looking society remains unwavering, even as we navigate complex challenges at home and abroad.

One of the most urgent issues we tackled this month is the rise in anti-immigration sentiment revealed by our latest GovDem survey. This trend threatens social stability and economic progress, and we have responded by amplifying the conversation through media engagements and policy dialogues. Our call is clear: South Africa must find constructive solutions that uphold human rights while safeguarding national interests.

On the constitutional front, our webinar series with Justice Albie Sachs delivered a compelling discussion on Mother Tongue Education. Language should unite, not divide. Embracing linguistic diversity in education is key to strengthening cultural identity and improving learning outcomes.

Globally, we engaged in the FOGGS Open Consultation on middle-power capabilities and hosted a high-level dialogue on UN80: Renewal or Decline? These platforms reaffirm our commitment to shaping multilateral reform and ensuring Africa's voice resonates in global governance.

Our research output this month includes reports on Africa's Security in Transition, rebuilding South African Airways and UN reform, alongside our flagship Journal for Inclusive Public Policy. These publications provide evidence-based insights to guide policymakers and stakeholders.

As we look ahead, our focus remains on strengthening democratic institutions, promoting inclusive policies, and driving research that informs meaningful change. Thank you for your continued support in advancing our shared vision of an inclusive and prosperous society.

Warm regards,

Daryl Swanepoel

The Role of Mother Tongue Education

On 17 September 2025, the Inclusive Society Institute, in partnership with Daily Maverick, hosted the third instalment of its Constitutional Insights by Albie Sachs webinar series. Building on a four-part podcast with former Constitutional Court Justice Albie Sachs, the series explores the Constitution, social justice, and the promise of transformation in South Africa, while highlighting the ongoing challenges of building an inclusive and equitable democracy.
